

Why is Sinochem selling overseas assets?

Divestment reflects a strategic realignment to enhance profitability and operational efficiency, positioning company for sustainable long-term growth Chinese state-owned energy conglomerate Sinochem is selling overseas assets across nine countries, in a move driven by a need to streamline operations amidst challenging market conditions.

Who owns Sinochem holdings?

Sinochem Holdings, which is wholly owned by China's State-owned Assets Supervision and Administration Commission of the State Council, is assessed on a top-down approach from the Chinese sovereign (A+/Stable) under Fitch's Government-Related Entities Rating Criteria.

Will Sinochem make new acquisitions?

Unlike other Chinese energy companies that buy and sell their overseas oil and gas assets based on market conditions, Sinochem is currently focused solely on offloading its foreign holdings and has no plans to make new acquisitions, according to a source familiar with the company.

Why did Sinochem sell its oil & gas portfolio?

The company's current portfolio includes up to 32 oil and gas blocks in countries including Brazil, Colombia and the US. The decision to sell is underscored by declining margins and sluggish investment returns, prompting Sinochem to recalibrate its focus.

Why is Sinochem weighing a sale of its upstream assets?

This shift marks a significant pivot for Sinochem, which has been weighing the sale of its overseas upstream assets to concentrate more on its downstream operations, including oil retail and chemicals. Sinochem, like many players in the industry, has faced the repercussions of low oil prices which have squeezed profitability.

Why is Sinochem relocating its employees?

This asset, developed in partnership with Pioneer Natural Resources, showcases strong production potential, producing about 60,000 barrels of oil equivalent per day. However, Sinochem's broader strategic vision necessitates reducing overhead costs, prompting it to repatriate its US-based employees amid shifting market dynamics.
